

Residence permit

Registration required

To live or work in Switzerland for more than three months, a permit is required. There are short-stay permits (L permit, up to one year), residence permits (B permit, limited stay), settlement permits (C permit, unlimited stay) and cross-border commuter permits (G permit). These permits must be applied for at the residents' registration office (Einwohnerkontrolle) of the municipality in which you live, within 14 days of entering the country and before starting work. In most cases, the residents' registration office is located at the municipal administration building (for example the town hall).

L permit (short stay)

This permit is for persons living in Switzerland for a limited period of time (usually one year) for a specific purpose. Most citizens of EU/EFTA countries with proof of employment of three months to one year (with an employment contract) are entitled to this permit.

B permit (residence)

This permit is for persons staying in Switzerland for a longer period of time. Most citizens of EU/EFTA countries are entitled to the B permit if they can prove that they will be working in Switzerland for more than one year (with an employment contract). The permit is issued to EU/EFTA citizens for five years. For persons from other countries, the validity period is one year, with the possibility of extension.

C permit (settlement)

This permit is issued to persons after 5 or 10 years of residence in Switzerland. The settlement permit is not tied to any conditions.

Bureau of Population and Migration / www.vs.ch

Reference: www.hallo-aargau.ch